On June 27th in the heart of Santa Ana, California, loud speakers from The Yost Theater carried out the beats of Los Angeles native Kristina Sky into the night.

Sky played throughout the evening as the venue filled up with party goers who have a deep love for the music. Bringing together old and new tunes, Sky was the only female DJ spinning that evening, catering to the pumped up crowd. She spun an amazing set that night, as always. "Being a female in the scene is definitely annoying at times because certain people don't take you seriously, but I do my best and show them I can do it as good as any male in the scene," Sky shared.

The DJ got started in the scene in the '90s as a concert goer, then turned to promoting the shows she attended. A few years after that she decided to start spinning herself, and the rest was history. "One of my favorite things about my job is having everyone just let go for an hour or so, forget about the weeks troubles and to just have a good time for a little while."

As the night unfolded there were smiles and laughter all around, the turn out was amazing, and everyone who came out to enjoy the music and atmosphere left with smiles and great memories.
