ARTIST TO WATCH | THE CUBE GUYS

RYAN MIDDLETON | 20 May, 2014 at 10:32

Generally for these artist to watch pieces, we choose guys who are young and show huge promise, but the path to success does not always happen quickly. In fact the old adage that success take 5 years or 10 years is perfectly embodied by these two Italian house DJs, The Cube Guys. The Cube Guys have been around as a duo since 2005, but individually, Roberto Intrallazzi and Luca Provera have been mainstays in the Italian house scene for decades.

Roberto Intrallazzi has been making music since the late 80s and 90s as one of Italy's first house music pioneers in the era when dance music was first hitting continental Europe through Ibiza and England, supplanting disco as the music of the discotheques. He met Luca Provera in 2000 and they fostered a strong relationship that culminated in the forming of The Cube Guys in 2005. Though they have been stalwarts in their home country of Italy for decades, that has not translated to much success abroad, until recently.

Patience is a virtuous trait and said attribute has been kind to The Cube Guys who have in the tail end of 2013 and 2014 received support on their tunes from the likes of Benny Benassi, UMEK, Dannic, Chuckie, Steve Angello, Tiësto, Nervo and so many more. Steve Angello has been hammering out their remix of Marcus Santoro "My Body", including on the Ultra main stage. Tiësto invited them to do an hour long guest mix on his Club Life radio show and they have been headlining some of the best clubs in the major US hotspots right now, including hitting Cielo here in NYC over the weekend. The time has finally come for The Cube Guys and you can only expect things to get better for them as they continue to grow in stature.
